

Blue Whale Project

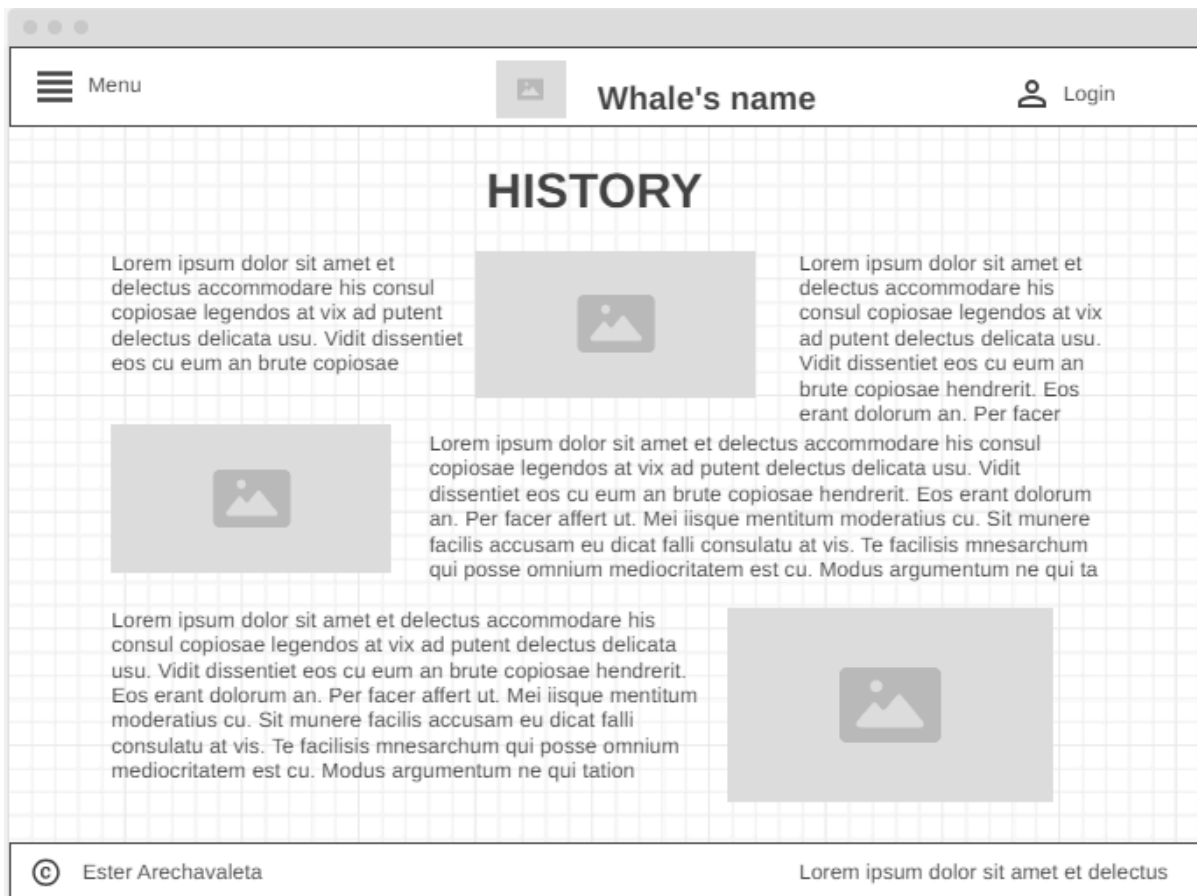

Desktop version:

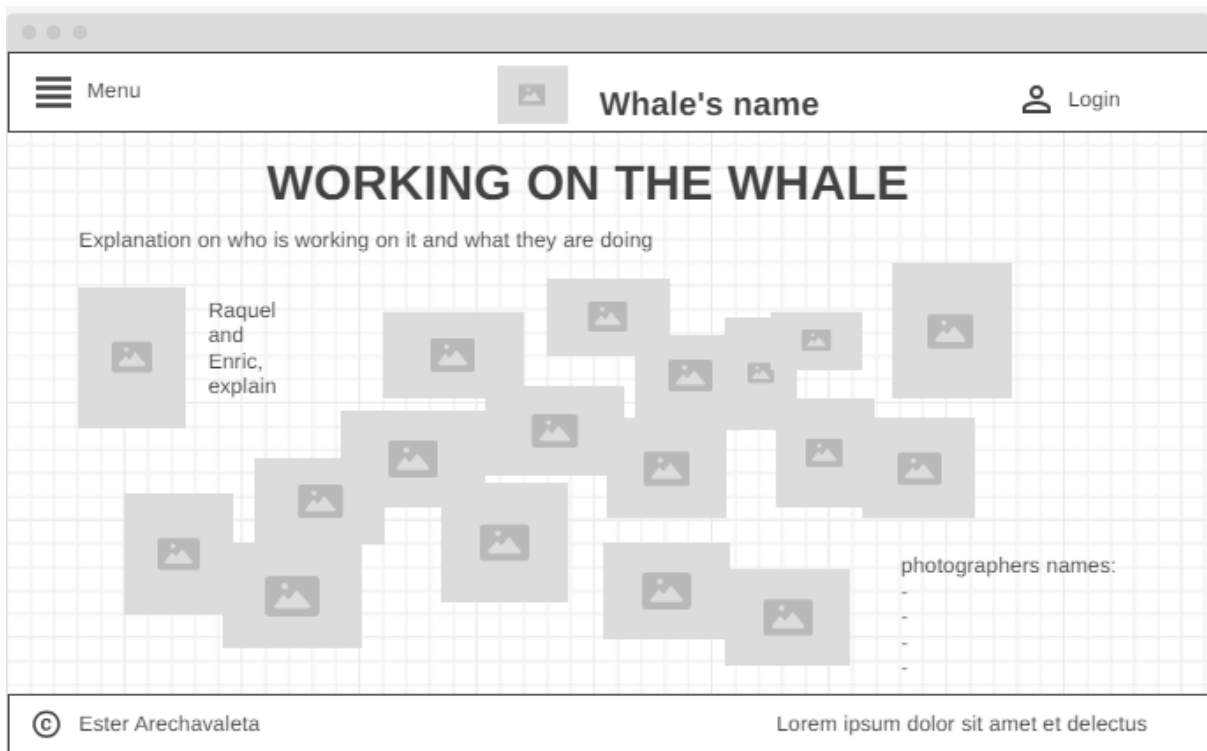

On the homepage, there will be, at the top, the menu, logo with the whale name and the login, in case the user has the required permissions to be able to enter infocards and news.

At the body, there will be the interactive 3D Model of the blue whale as the main thing, but on the right, so the whale's name will be on the left, giving it importance.

Just underneath it, there will be a little bit of text, with the beginning of its story to catch the user's attention, and a link right at the end to the page with the whole of its history.

When the user clicks on SEE MORE at the end of the homepage, or goes to the HISTORY page on the menu, they will go to this page, where they can read it's history with the historical photos embedded in between. As we do not know yet how long the text will be, I have just put one page, but they will be able to scroll down if needed.

At this section of the menu, there will be the photos taken, with the names of the photographers at the bottom, with a little explanation of who did what and how they did it.

At this section they can see the carousel to select the news the user wants to read in completion. The items on the carousel, show in very little the date it was published so there is a bit of order and the user knows better.

Also, in all the pages at the header, instead of the icon and "login", if the user is logged in, it shows their photo, if they have uploaded one, and name.

This is an example of what a news report could look like. It would also say who wrote it and when, as well as who the photographer was.

The photographs would be embedded inside the text or just as it appears, if there are no more than one photograph.
